It was part of a three-week preschool and kindergarten unit of study on horses and ponies. Teachers at the school, located at 1330 W. 15th St., Upland, made hobby horses for the children and took them to visit a riding stable. The study ended with a parade of the students and songs. Donate 141 units

Upland High pupils give blood

The student council at Upland High School recently sponsored a blood drive in the UHS auditorium. Students who weighed at least 110 lbs. and were 18 or older could donate, and those who were 17 could donate if they had a parent's signature. Parents and faculty were also encouraged to give blood.

This year the school's drive collected 141 units, which was slightly over last year's total of 137 units. Upland did very well last year, collecting more units than any other high school in Southern California, with the exception of Apple Valley High. This time, in an effort to come up with even more donors, Upland High School Student Council arranged for competition with two other Chaffey Union District high schools. The schools, Chaffey and Alta Loma, are to have their drives at a later date.

Leroy Kelly, representing the blood bank of this area, spoke to the students in an assembly before the drive. In an effort to rid possible donors of the fear of pain, Kelly said, "The actual process of donating doesn't hurt at all. The blood test before the donation is what may be considered painful to a few, but even that is just a small prick in the finger." He emphasized this statement by noting the fact that many donors come back and say "When can I do it again?" after giving blood for the first time.

Kelly also spoke of the importance of high school drives. "We are in almost constant anxiety wondering if we have enough blood to suffice," said Kelly. He continued, "When we come up with a drive, we quit worrying for awhile because we know we'll get a great deal of blood." This is probably because high schools have a much higher percentage of donors than other groups of people. Out of every 100 people in general that are able to donate, 3 people give. However, out of every 100 high school students that are able to donate, at least 30 or 40 give.

Mr. Kelly was very pleased with the results U.H.S. produced. He expressed his feelings by saying, "This is great. These students have come to understand that they're actually helping themselves. After all, we (the blood banks) don't need blood — hospitals do!"

Melinda Bowen, ASB president and student council spokesperson at U.H.S., was proud of her school's effort. "I felt this was successful in two ways. First, we saved some lives, and secondly we showed school spirit and pride in the process!" Bowen concluded "If we don't win the contest (with Chaffey and Alta Loma), we'll at least have the satisfaction of knowing that we set a high goal to beat!"

Barbed remarks at Upland forum

Council candidates give views

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

The first barbed remarks of the Upland City Council race flew last week as the three candidates faced the public in their two opening forums.

City council hopefuls had a full day as they met with Upland High School seniors in the morning, and the Upland Kiwanis Club at noon.

Attorney Gregory Annigian, businessman Al Canestro and realtor A.C. "Chuck" Lawrence all stressed needs in the city budget, growth and development and the importance of the Foothill Freeway in the community.

The surprise move, however, came when Annigian accused Canestro of conflict of interest during a 1978 planning commission vote regarding a general plan amendment in the southeast quadrant of the city.

Canestro, a member of the planning commission for 13 years, owns property in the area that was zoned for medium, rather than low, density residential development. The original plan included Canestro's property in the low density zone, but was amended at the March 23, 1978 meeting to the higher density. Commissioner John Meyer moved to approve the amendment and was seconded by Canestro.

According to Planning Director Bill Young Tuesday, the change was made "strictly in response to staff investigation" of the area, and was made to comply with the issue of non-conforming land use.

"I have no indication that this would have been a situation involving conflict of interest," said Young. "I don't believe he (Canestro) even said much on the issue."

In addressing the charges, Canestro said Annigian had failed to investigate the full situation surrounding the decision, and added that the property was fully developed at the time and thus would not be overtly affected.

In discussing other issues, all three candidates agreed that the city budget would be a matter of primary concern, particularly if Proposition 9 passes in June.

Lawrence said city finances were not being handled wisely, and he felt funds were in many cases not used as efficiently as they could be.

Citing his business experience as a strong recommendation for dealing with financial problems, Lawrence added that he thought he was one of the few candidates to show interest by attending all city council meetings after filing for the race.

Annigian strongly supported more community involvement in city fiscal matters, praising the role the public would play in deciding the issue of a paramedic unit in the fire department in the April election.

He said his main motivation for seeking the office was a deep conviction to preserve the community against the forces of overdevelopment.

"I know growth is inevitable," he told the Kiwanis Club, "but growth can be by design — not low cost housing tracts, low grade commercial enterprises or zone changes."

Canestro said the city, serving as a hub to four freeway systems and home to a growing community, would have to develop new sources of revenue. City services will have to expand with the population, he said, and placed as high priority items funding for storm drains, a new police facility, and stressed the importance of the proposed Foothill Freeway to the community.

When high school students earlier that morning queried the candidates as to the fate of Upland if plans for the freeway were canceled, Canestro again expressed the importance of the route to the city.

He added if the road were canceled, the city would have to join forces with the county to develop another east-west route, perhaps 19th Street, and additional north-south roads to take some of the traffic off of Euclid and Mountain avenues.

Annigian said the cancellation of the freeway was a realistic issue, and pointed out that if other north-south arteries were constructed they would tend to encourage further heavy development within the city.

The students asked candidates what decision made by the council in the last year they would most disagree with.

Lawrence said he wasn't satisfied with arrangements made for the scenic corridor along Euclid Avenue, saying portions of the plan don't serve the citizens of Upland as they might.

Canestro chose the northwest quadrant of the city, citing it as a "last outpost for fine, high-quality housing," and that he thought a lower density for the area might have served the city better.

Annigian said the council had ducked zoning problems in the southeast portion of the city, and he advocated facing the problems and solving them rather than letting the issue drag on.

Mayoral candidates will face the Kiwanis Club at another forum next Tuesday at the Arbor Restaurant.

'Bigoted reference' to school rapped

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Teachers and parents of Upland Junior High School students have protested "bigoted references" regarding the school made in a letter presented to district trustees Tuesday.

The letter, signed by Ontario attorney Alfredo Rivas, cited seven reasons why a proposed boundary change channeling students into Upland Junior High from Pioneer Junior High should not be approved by the board.

One of the objections presented by Rivas was the "effect on children based to Upland Junior High School due to gang-related activities and drug problems."

UJH staff members have demanded a written apology in a letter drafted Friday and signed by 31 teachers and administrators.

A small but indignant contingent of eight parents and alumni of the school met with Principal Bob Nolan and Assistant Principal Walter Stout to support of the faculty's action.

"I feel as if someone has slapped us in the face," said parent Lyn Gaumer. "We have to let these people know we aren't going to sit and take insults like this."

The parents were organized by Jennie Ruiz, who lives across the street from the school.

"They have offended us," she said of Rivas and the parents whose views he was representing. "While we don't want to treat them in the same manner, we have to let them know how we feel."

"I felt it was time for Upland Junior High parents to get together to show what good this school has done for our community."

The group cited many of the positive things accomplished by both the school and the students, including the fact that it is the only accredited junior high in the county and the exemplary teaching methods are used as a model for other schools.

According to district figures, 26 percent of the UJH population are minorities, but Nolan pointedly said to parents "there are no real minorities at our school."

Two parents who work as aides in the school said they had noticed no problems of any sort, and students were well-behaved in the classroom and at dances and in the schoolyard.

District Superintendent George Renworth said he could understand the group's concern, but the bottom line was that problems of any sort were minor at both schools.

Gus Ramos, alumnus of the school and executive director of the Upland Housing Authority, said he realized the group's actions would not change attitudes, but said "educating" the public as to the school's strong features could reduce prejudice.

Parents to be on committee

School boundaries study ok'd by Upland trustees

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

More than 150 parents challenged Upland School District trustees last week as the board proposed boundary changes for the district's two junior high schools.

In response, the board ordered the formation of a parents' advisory committee to study the proposed changes, and will delay action until the group reports their findings on the end of April.

District officials had proposed assigning roughly 75 of this year's sixth graders attending Magnolia, Sierra Vista and Sycamore schools to Upland Junior High School next year. Other students attending those three schools will go to Pioneer Junior High.

Superintendent George Renworth said Pioneer currently has 898 students enrolled, and that capacity of the school is 850.

Upland Junior High is well below its capacity of 775 with 538 students.

Parents protested that they were not given sufficient notification on the boundary change. Parents of the sixth graders affected by the decision had received letters from the district, but no other parents were notified.

The two-year plan includes a similar reassignment of 75 students, currently fifth graders, to Upland Junior High in 1981. Renworth said the two-step approach was chosen so students currently attending one of the junior highs would not be transferred.

Parents also expressed dissatisfaction over the number of students who would have to cross Euclid Avenue in order to attend Upland Junior High. Renworth said the district would provide a bus for those students, but could not guarantee its continuance if Proposition 9 passes on the June ballot.

"That's something I don't really have control over," he said. "At this point we can't guarantee anything until we know more what our financial situation will be."

School districts are reimbursed for a large proportion of their transportation expenses by the state, and he fears that program may be cut if the proposition passes.

The parent advisory committee was originally formed in the mid-1970s, but dealt only with elementary school boundaries in the district.

Parents presented the board with a letter drafted by attorneys Alfredo Rivas and Roger Remlinger. Both men are also parents of school-age children in the district.

Included in the letter were concerns regarding drug- and gang-related problems in the junior highs, but it was reported at the meeting that Upland Police Chief Coy Estes said the problem was "minor" at both schools.

The parent group will investigate alternatives to the proposed boundary changes with respect to overcrowding of schools, busing requirements and effect on the student population.

Club helps mothers of twins to cope

By DONALD J. NEWMAN
Staff Writer

Twins may be double the pleasure and double the fun, but their parents sometimes sag under the weight of double the responsibility.

A club headed by a Rancho Cucamonga woman is trying to ease the strain.

Mothers of Twins clubs try to provide mothers with opportunities to socialize, discuss their problems with other mothers and engage in a little philanthropy on the side, according to Linda David, president of the Pomona Valley Chapter.

Nancy Lakkees

"It's kind of a help and self-help group," said Mrs. David as she, past president Nancy Lakkees and special events committee chairman Carol LaClaire talked about the organization and its activities. All are from Rancho Cucamonga.

"You can't try to join," said Mrs. David, adding, "God chooses the members, nature chooses the members."

Because raising twins is hard on a mother's social life, the group organizes a wide range of activities to provide relief. But these are not tea-and-crumpets gossip circles, the women said.

"You really need to get out and have that time out," said Mrs. David.

To this end, the mothers meet monthly and often break into groups, based on the ages of their children, and discuss common problems, solutions and anything else that might make their job a little easier, the women said.

It is a group, said Mrs. LaClaire, in which "you know that the people you're going to meet have something in common with you and your problems ... and joys."

"You can tell somebody about your kids and they sympathize with you," interjected Mrs. David, adding the others can also appreciate the pleasurable moments.

"There really are special joys in having twins," she added.

In addition to the "rap sessions," the group sponsors family outings, picnics, dances and other family-oriented activities.

Carol LaClaire

One of the main reasons the club is so successful is because everyone is included in its activities, according to Mrs. Lakkees, who said the group takes care to include the fathers and even "in the special things we do, the kids are all included."

Nor is there any pressure on the group's members to perform, the women continued, saying the club operates with the realization that each member's family is the center of their attention.

The club even has a sunshine chairman who checks on the mothers who have not been heard from for some time and helps arrange assistance for those with problems.

The club's desire to help, however, extends far beyond the membership. Each year the club spends its $2,000 to $2,500 annual budget helping "child-oriented" services, said Mrs. David.

The club, through fund-raising events such as its annual fashion show in which children are models, has purchased playground equipment, tricycles, balls and even diagnostic equipment for hospitals.

The group has a chairman who surveys the needs of local hospitals, then presents the general membership with a list and the members decide what to give, according to Mrs. Lakkees.

The group even supported an orphan in Bogota, Columbia, until the boy turned 18, she said. The club dropped the project when the foster children's organization changed the rules and ceased to allow multiple parents.

But probably the most important activity of the group, the women say, is simply passing on the slowly accumulating body of knowledge about twins. Rearing twins is different than rearing "singletons" and parents must take care to nurture two personalities and not just one, they observe.

After the children become aware of their differences, it can be damaging to continue dressing them alike, buying them the same presents and generally treating them as a single person, the women said.

"At an early age it's okay, but as they get older, you have to watch out for their personalities. You don't want them to grow up as a unit," Mrs. David said, explaining that the children become extremely dependent on each other.

The mothers are also distressed by the tendency of others to compare twins, whether they are identical or fraternal. Comparisons can be damaging to the youngsters, the women said.

"Some people don't realize these kids can hear and it's not good for them," said Mrs. David.

County exotic animals law review requested

Supervisor Bob Hammock Monday called for a review of what he termed a "badly worded" ordinance governing the keeping of exotic animals in San Bernardino County's unincorporated residential districts.

The supervisor said his request stemmed from a spontaneous reaction from individuals throughout the county who became concerned over an Arrowhead resident's efforts to keep her 2-year-old pet jaguar.

Maureen Wiles has a permit from the State Department of Fish and Game to keep her declawed and defanged cat, named "Tigger," but county codes do not permit such animals in areas zoned for residential use. Wiles has been cited, but Hammock said the district attorney's office is willing to delay prosecution to allow time for a review.

The supervisors, on a 3-2 vote, agreed to the request. Supervisors Dennis Hansberger and James L. Mayfield cast the "no" votes. Both oppose maintaining any wild or exotic animal in a domestic environment.

In other actions Monday, the board:

— Endorsed the concept of a

"people mover" transportation system between the valley and mountain areas, suggested by State Assemblyman Bill Leonard.

— Approved plans and authorized bidding procedures for construction of 38 T-hanger units at Chino Airport. The project will be financed from a $480,000 loan from the state. Funds generated from hangar fees will be used to repay the 10-year obligation at 6.75 percent interest, thus requiring no county general fund commitment.

— Authorized the Flood Control District to seek $19.5 million in federal grants for various construction projects in behalf of the cities of Montclair, Upland, Ontario, Rancho Cucamonga and the Chino Basin Water Conservation Service.

— Called for bids to build a new fire station near Baseline and Palm Avenue in the Highland area. The county, through County Service Area 38 proposed to build a 3,500-square-foot structure which will be manned by the state Department of Forestry fire personnel.

— Approved a 20-year-lease with Chino Jet Services, Inc. to occupy 934 acres at Chino Airport. The company will build a hangar, offices and provide fuel facilities for small business-commercial jet aircraft. The lease will provide annual income for the county of $2,263 plus commissions.

— Awarded a $49,691 contract to Bell Roof Co. of San Bernardino to reroof the county courthouse; a $27,966 contract to Morrison-Hope, Inc. of San Bernardino to reroof the Glen Helen Rehabilitation Center maximum security building; and a $31,639 contract with Merlin Johnson Construction of Mentone to construct water mains at Chino Airport.

— Continued the local state of emergency an additional 14 days. The emergency was declared in January when torrential rainstorms damaged both public and private property.

— Approved a request by Apple Valley Cable Television service to raise its basic monthly rate from $8.85 to $10; and raise Liberty Cable Television service rates from $6.75 to $7.50 a month.

— Approved a joint powers agreement between Wrightwood Fire Protection District, county Service Area 19 (Lucerne Valley) Victorville, Apple Valley and Hesperia, for a regional Fire Protection Authority fire dispatching.

complications can be prevented through vaccination. To help prevent an outbreak of measles this spring, the San Bernardino County Public Health Department is offering free measles immunizations for children between 15 months and 18 years old who 1) have never been immunized; 2) have never had measles; or 3) were immunized before January, 1969. Because the earlier vaccine was not as effective as the one currently being used, Dr. Louis E. Mahoney, Director of the Public Health Department, recommends reimmunization for children who received measles vaccine before 1969.

Free measles vaccinations set in area

Measles has not been thought of as a serious disease. It should be. Before vaccines were available, measles struck hundreds of thousands of children each year, killing hundreds of them and afflicting hundreds more with such serious complications as encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain that can cause mental retardation.

Somewhat, the dangers of the disease were never widely recognized, which perhaps explains why many people have not been especially eager to have their children vaccinated. In 1977, only about 70 percent of the nation's children were vaccinated for measles, with the result that there were over 57,000 cases of the disease that spring. Measles outbreaks tend to occur during March, April and May.

And yet measles and the serious

Preslan to manage R.C. library site

Kris Preslan, formerly with the Colton Public Library, has replaced Teresa Portilla as the manager of the Rancho Cucamonga branch of the San Bernardino County Library.

At UCB Rancho Cucamonga the party may be over, but the celebration is still going on.

It was a lovely Grand Opening Party while it lasted. But there isn't a reason in the world why we can't extend our celebration. After all, it isn't every day we open a new office in such a beautiful community. So our charter checking offer continues on.

Will work with youth

Probation volunteers sought

Do you have time to help a troubled youth? If you do, the San Bernardino County Probation Department needs you.

Approximately 25 volunteers are needed to help supervise youngsters on probation in the West End, said Gary Paytas, community resources coordinator for the probation department.

Budgetary cutbacks have increased the caseload for paid probation officers, Paytas said, creating the need for assistance from the community.

The youths, both boys and girls, range in age from 8 to 18 and have committed a variety of offenses, such as petty theft, burglary and robbery, Paytas said.

Volunteers are required to attend a training course which will be held one evening a week for three weeks. Each session will last two hours and the class will include a tour of juvenile hall and some of our treatment facilities," said Paytas, who will teach the class.

Interested persons should call Warren Hawkins, supervising probation officer, at 988-1175 or visit the West End branch of the probation department at the court complex at Sixth Street and Mountain Avenue.

Open house will be held

"Kellogg's Kreation," Cal Poly Pomona's 34th annual Poly Vue open house will be held for the public the weekend of April 18-20. The three-day event will include academic displays and information, tours, special events and exhibits, entertainment, a rodeo, horseshow, children's theater, special interest activities, barbecue, international dinner and multimedia presentations.

For additional information, telephone the Cal Poly news and publications office at 598-4733.

Veterans honor members, friends

More than 150 persons gathered at Chino Memorial Post 1784, Veterans of Foreign Wars Post Home recently to celebrate "Appreciation Day." Members of the Montclair-Chino Chapter of the Disabled American Veterans, under the chairmanship of Fred Hivner and Lyonel Madole, served a free barbecue dinner to show their appreciation for courtesies extended to them by the VFW.

As the two-hour serving period drew to a close, a huge birthday cake was brought forth to honor the 78th birthday of Mrs. Sadie Moy, a long-time resident of Chino. Hivner and Madole also presented her with a life membership in the DAV Auxiliary and Doris Hivner presented her with a gold life membership pin.

Following the dinner, All-State Post Commander Al Kean of the VFW introduced State Senator Ruben S. Ayala — the first member on the post's charter. In behalf of the post, Kean presented the senator with a golden award citation for meritorious service.

James G. Chandler, volunteer worker with and for the blind, from College Park, Md., looks at games for children and adults who are visually handicapped. These games are the work of Carl, left, and Evelyn Krueger of Hemet. All were at the 21st annual conference of the California Transcribers and Educators of the Visually Handicapped held last weekend at Griswold's Claremont. In the display area, there were many aids for the visually handicapped from a "talking" typewriter to braille tape recorder developed in France. (Staff photo by Marge Gross)

Over 500 persons attended the 21st annual conference of the California Transcribers and Educators of the Visually Handicapped held recently for three days at Griswold's in Claremont.

Jane O'Connor, chairperson of conference entertainment, said at the banquet that "this has been the most 'Up' conference we have held."

The CTEVH is a non-profit organization with a membership of volunteer and school employed transcribers, teachers, school and agency administrators, librarians, rehabilitation counselors, parents, students and others concerned with the special needs of individuals with visual impairment who require reading materials in braille, large type or tape recordings.

The Pomona Valley Transcribers Guild members were hosts for the conference with Rose Kelber and Marilyn Plaster as co-chairmen.

A highlight of the banquet was the presentation of the brailled book, "Spend All Your Kisses, Mr. Smith," to the author, Jack Smith, guest speaker, by Lucille Brooks. Mrs. Brooks had brailled the book, and Smith will present it to a Los Angeles library.

Principals taking part in the workshops and the general session were: Dr. Roy Hill, superintendent of schools, San Bernardino County; Bill Plaster, superintendent of schools, Ontario-Montclair School District; John Flores, assistant superintendent of public instruction and director of special schools and services, California State Department of Education;

Dr. Donald R. McKinley, chief deputy superintendent of public instructions, California State Department of Education; Bill Briggs, CTEVH president; Dr. Emerson Foulke, director of perceptual alternatives laboratory, University of Louisville; Dr. Phil Hatlen, professor of special education, San Francisco State University; and Fred L. Sinclair, director, Clearinghouse Depository for Handicapped Students.

Participants at the conference came from the West, mid-East and the East Coast as well as several foreign countries.

Within the three days, persons concerned with all aspects of aiding and educating the visually handicapped conducted 40 workshops concerning such subjects as training brailists, sex education, living skills, mathematics, music, proofreading for transcribers, ideal facilities, master plan for teachers of the visually handicapped, career counseling, typing, visual aids and update on issues affecting programs for the visually handicapped.

In the display area there were incredible aids for the visually handicapped. There was a television-like screen, which enlarges the printed word, and photographs, a typewriter which "talks" electronically, a tape recorder which transposes a taped story into braille on top of the recorder.

There also was a display and resource persons available to tell the offerings of the Braille Institute of America.

Entertainment for the president's reception was provided by the Piddleharmonics, and the Vina Danks Junior High School's Lab Band.

2 colleges battle HEW over student funds

By MARGUERITE SULLIVAN
Copley News Service
WASHINGTON — Two tiny private colleges are battling the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare in an effort to make sure their students continue to receive federal loans and grants.

The giant bureaucracy's issue with the colleges, which accept no direct federal aid, is that their officials refuse to sign HEW forms stating they do not discriminate against women.

The colleges must sign such a document, HEW insists, even though there are no accusations that they ever have discriminated against women.

Many in higher education say the conflict symbolizes the question of whether big government has become too involved in regulating colleges, at the expense of academic freedom.

The schools are Hillsdale College, in southern Michigan, and Grove City College, midway between Pittsburgh and Erie, Pa. Hillsdale has 1,000 students and Grove City has 2,200 students.

The battle has its roots in the Title IX education amendments passed by Congress in 1972, which prohibit sex discrimination in federally assisted education programs. Congress authorized HEW to promulgate rules and regulations to enforce these measures, with the ultimate penalty for discrimination a cutoff of federal assistance.

In 1975 HEW issued its final regulations, which the agency said covered colleges that had no federal programs but whose students received federal assistance. The regulations cover everything from equality in high school recruitment to college testing and extracurricular activities.

By December 1978 HEW had asked 20,000 colleges and school districts to sign its standard Title IX "assurance of compliance," stating they would comply with all Title IX requirements. Initially, 12 colleges and 38 school districts refused to sign.

When HEW threatened to cut off funds, all complied — except for Hillsdale and Grove City. HEW thereupon filed an administrative proceeding to cut off federal loans and grants to students at both institutions.

According to spokesmen for the two colleges, both have a long history of refusing federal aid so they can remain free of federal regulation.

In HEW's view, however, the two colleges are subject to Title IX because some of their students receive federal loans and grants. In the case of Hillsdale, for instance, 20 percent of its students receive some sort of federal aid to help pay tuition.

Both institutions argue that since only certain students and not the colleges as a whole receive aid, HEW exceeded its authority in defining federal student loans and grants as aid to the institutions themselves.

Neither institution has been charged with practicing any sex discrimination. Both have approximately a 50-50 ratio of women to men enrolled and claim a long history of equality.

In 1951 Hillsdale graduated the first woman in Michigan and the second in the United States ever to receive a bachelor's degree.

"It seems especially ironic that Hillsdale College, which pioneered in non-discriminatory treatment long before the first federal legislation on the subject, should now be compelled to comply with government regulations promulgated in the name of equal rights for women," said George C. Roche III, president of Hillsdale.

HEW initiated proceedings against Hillsdale and Grove City, requesting that all federal student grants and loans be cut off.

Both colleges filed an administrative proceeding against HEW.

Albert P. Feldman, HEW administrative law judge in the Grove City case, ordered the college to sign the assurance of compliance form or have its students lose their federal scholarships.

At the same time, Feldman said of the college: "It should also be noted that there was not the slightest hint of any failure to comply with Title IX save the refusal to submit an executed assurance of compliance with Title IX. This refusal is obviously a matter of conscience and belief."

Grove City went no further in the HEW administrative law procedure, but instead took its case to federal court.

In the Hillsdale case, however, HEW administrative law judge Herbert L. Perlman handed down an order that both sides claimed was in their favor. In August 1978 he ruled that acceptance of federal aid by Hillsdale students does subject the college to HEW regulations. Perlman also ruled the college's refusal to sign the assurance does not allow HEW to suspend the aid, however. HEW, he ruled, should take no action to terminate the loans and grants until the agency's office for civil rights had charged the college with an actual violation.

With this ruling, both HEW and Hillsdale took their objections to the next administrative level, HEW's reviewing panel.

Last fall, the three-member panel overruled Perlman. It said Hillsdale College must sign the "assurance of compliance" or all federal aid and loan money to its students will be cut off.

Hillsdale had 20 days to appeal this decision to HEW Secretary Patricia Roberts Harris. It did not appeal. Instead, the college is waiting for HEW's civil rights division to formally ask Harris to terminate Hillsdale students' aid.

If Harris signs the order,

Hillsdale probably will go the route of Grove City and take the issue to federal court.

"We are not going to lose," stated Bob Smith, public relations director for Grove City College. "If it is necessary we will appeal this clear to the Supreme Court."

Rev. Forrest is directing the work of his society, in the Philippines, where a student center is operated in the heart of a quarter million university and college students.

A boat ministry, utilizing three gospel boats, has touched over 350 inhabited islands.

Five "forgotten tribes" are being ministered to, through native Filipino missionaries, who have been trained and are directed by the society.

An Agriculturalists for Christ Training School (ACTS), in conjunction with Bible School Training of natives, is also teaching them the art of modern agriculture, so they may be able to grow ample food.

New churches are being pioneered, with the actual construction of church buildings being pursued by the society.

Rev. Forrest will relate the phenomenal success of these ministries, directed at 47,000,000 Filipinos, whose number includes only 4 percent of evangelical Christians. The public is cordially invited to come and hear him speak.

Economy falters but Christ's cross doesn't

By REV. MARVIN R. GANT
Montclair Ministerial Association

For several years now, I have given to persons on various occasions a small aluminum cross. It has been given with the understanding that whether it is carried in a pocket or a purse, that we remind ourselves daily of Christ's presence with us.

That we recognize His Lordship over our possessions...that as we spend our money out of that pocket or purse, we were to remember Him and let him guide our lives.

Daily the cross reminds me, whether I have any money or not, that He holds the key to all of life. As we all look humbly and sacrificially into our lives this Lenten season, let us remind ourselves that the cross is there for a reason. To remind us who we are, how we need Christ and the cross for a reference point for all of the rest of our lives, our possessions, how we spend our money, and how we daily live our lives.

As interest rates rise and fall, the stock market is bullish or plummets, gas lines lengthy or non-existent, and our worldly possessions come and go, or have to be replaced, the cross continues forever.

The little poem by Verna Thomas entitled "The Cross In My Pocket" tells the story we all need to hear, and I want to pass it along, because all of us need a cross in our pocket.

I carry a cross in my pocket
A simple reminder to me
Of the fact that I am a Christian
No matter where I may be
This little cross is not magic
Nor is it a good luck charm
It isn't meant to protect me
From every physical harm
It's not for identification
For all the world to see
It's simply an understanding
Between my Savior and me
When I put my hand in my pocket
To bring out a coin or a key
The Cross is there to remind me
Of the price He paid for me
It reminds me too, to be thankful
For my blessings day by day
And to strive to serve Him better
In all that I do and say
It's also a daily reminder
Of the peace and comfort I share
With all who know my Master
And give themselves to His care
So, I carry a cross in my pocket
Reminding no one but me
That Jesus Christ is Lord of my life
If only I'll let Him be

'Special' youngsters conquer handicaps

Recess!

Chris Fellows joined the other first graders as they crowded out the door towards the playground.

He clowned for a minute, pretending to administer a karate chop on a buddy, then headed off toward the basketball court at a fast clip.

Chris, like the other children in Room 1 at Condit School in Claremont, looks forward to getting out in the sun to play ball and have a little fun.

But unlike the others, Chris is strapped into a bulky metal wheelchair, paralyzed from mid-chest down by spina bifida (separation of the spine).

There are other complications, and through roughly 16 surgeries in his 7 years, doctors have tried to keep Chris as active as they can. But he will probably never be able to walk or run like his classmates.

Chris is able to walk briefly with the help of locking leg braces and a walker, but spends most of his time in the manual wheelchair. He's become an expert with the ungainly contraption, and even claims that tag is one of his favorite games, "because I'm so good at it."

Chris is a charmer. He faces the problems posed by his disabled body much the same way he faces the inconvenience of having lost his two front teeth recently.

"You just have to do it a little different," he said cheerfully, taking a large bite out of an imaginary apple, using the intact teeth on the side.

"Chris doesn't miss his legs," said his mother, Mary Fellows. "He knows they don't work, but it's always been that way and it doesn't seem to have really hit him yet."

"He even asked the other day if we'd teach him to ice skate."

Thanks to the efforts of his parents, Don and Mary, his teachers, the government, and a large dose of courage of his own, Chris is able to spend as much time as possible in the society he will live in as an adult.

He is one of the youngest students in the area to be mainstreamed — a program where handicapped children are placed in a normal classroom environment. Chris splits his time between Danbury, a school for the orthopedically and physically handicapped children, and Condit School, one of the regular elementary schools in the Claremont district.

Although mainstreaming itself is not a new concept, major impetus in recent years comes from federal law PL 94-142, the education for all handicapped children act.

The law, effective since October 1977, requires that all handicapped children be placed in a normal classroom environment. Chris splits his time between Danbury, a school for the orthopedically and physically handicapped children, and Condit School, one of the regular elementary schools in the Claremont district.

Someone has pulled an oversized desk (borrowed from a sixth grade class) to the head of the table. Chris rolls up in the wheelchair which fits underneath comfortably, and joins his classmates.

As Chris adjusted and began spending more time at Condit, other changes had to be made.

When he started staying for recess, a special meeting was called for all primary students who would be sharing the playground with Chris.

Harriett Gusman, guidance counselor at Danbury, visited the school with a film on the handicapped, and brought a wheelchair, leg braces and walker. The children were invited to try the apparatus and get a feeling for some of the problems their new friend might experience.

Other adjustments often must be made, especially when the school is not outfitted to handle the needs of disabled students.

Transportation must be provided in special vans equipped to handle wheelchairs. Since the disabled students spend varying degrees of time at Danbury and other schools, schedules are often irregular and must be coordinated.

Some handicapped children also need assistance when going to the rest room, and teachers or aides must be trained to meet those needs.

Educational programs between the teachers involved must also be coordinated. Some disabled children have problems which affect their learning, such as coordination and mobility, thus they must work harder to meet the same goals as classmates.

Chris participates as fully as possible with his friends but is occasionally stymied. That does not mean, however, that he sits on the outskirts to watch.

During a physical education class when the children are working on tumbling and balancing, Chris will pull his wheelchair alongside the line of students, and keep up a running conversation, roughhousing with some, whispering secrets to others and even flirting with the girls.

He refuses to be left out and also makes up exercises for himself using the classroom equipment.

The emphasis on "least restrictive educational environment" offers a realm of opportunity to disabled students, but it also poses difficulty as a balancing act between special students and the rest of the class.

Gusman agreed that the handicapped child takes more of a teacher's time in class. At Danbury, each student shares the instructor's attention with only 10 or 12 others, but in regular schools the teacher may be working with 25 children.

Chris had to learn how to study by himself, without constant assistance from Witham, but she said he is learning to be more independent.

Sometimes friendship is nothing more than a hand resting on a buddy's wheelchair. At least that's what Chris Fellows has discovered while being mainstreamed part-time into regular classes at Condit School in Claremont. Chris still attends a special school for the handicapped, but his time at that facility is continually being reduced.

In making that balancing act work, though, Gusman said it is important to insure teachers won't be overburdened with special student needs at the expense of the rest of the class.

Con Leatherman, administrator of the West End Special Education Service Region, cites one case in Orange County where a handful of changes had to be made to accommodate the mainstreamed student.

"They need lots of special assistance, such as a nurses aide, respirator on the premises and an emergency phone installed."

"The boy was evidently socially adept and interacted well with the others, but we have to be careful of the strain imposed on the rest of the class with the special arrangements."

Leatherman said there are also financial difficulties associated with mainstreaming.

Although he estimated $6,000 to $8,000 per year is spent on each handicapped child in a California educational program, the federal government provided only $104 per child last year due to budget cuts.

"And that," he said ruefully, "doesn't go far."

There are also problems posed by the phrase "free and appropriate education" — interpreted differently by parents of the handicapped and educators. Leatherman said he knows of parents who say the only appropriate recourse is to send their child to a private program in Utah or Oregon — the cost of which would be enough to service several students.

Mrs. Fellows said that she and her husband were pleased with Chris' results with mainstreaming.

"We're very proud of him," she said. "He's become much more independent. He'll take off of a Saturday and just like any kid you won't even see him until the evening."

"We hope to eventually have him full-time in the regular school — maybe by the end of next year."

"We want to move very slowly, and let Chris have the chance to get used to things."

Cinnamon Alvarez joins Chris to help make snow cones in the backyard of the Fellows' Claremont home.

Walking is a slow a laborious process for Chris, above, but with the aid of leg braces and a walker he can get around to a limited extent. He joins classmates at Condit for a reading lesson, right, using a sixth-grader's desk that accommodates his bulky wheelchair. He's learning how to be treated as part of the group rather than an individual with a problem who needs special attention.

Tomatoes ranked No. 1

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

No. 1 in popularity amongst the nation's vegetable gardeners is the tomato. Even backyard gardeners who do not plant a vegetable garden will often have a few tomato plants stationed in a sunny, sheltered spot against the house.

Tomatoes - botanically speaking, they are a fruit - have been a favorite taste treat in America and Europe since the 1500s. Besides being quite delicious to eat in so many ways, the tomato offers solid nutrition. Each average tomato delivers 1600 I.U. of vitamin A, 35 mg. of vitamin C, respectable amounts of thiamine, riboflavin and niacin, 16 mg. of calcium, .09 mg. of iron, 2 mg. of protein and only 30 calories.

Your favorite seed catalog probably lists many pages of tomato varieties - all very confusing to plow through and decide which one is best for you. The first thing to decide is how you will use your tomatoes. Will they all be eaten fresh, or will most be canned, or made into paste?

The home gardener who wants tomatoes for fresh eating and canning would do well to examine the newer hybrid tomatoes. Hybrids are produced by a hand-pollinated cross between two distinct parent lines. This produces extreme vigor, more uniform growth, higher yields and better quality than open pollinated types.

Hybrids do need more fertilizer, and all suckers removed when the plants are small. I have had best success with Ultra Girl - an easy grower that is tolerant to many standard tomato diseases.

For far northern regions or for home gardeners who like to enjoy an early tomato from their garden, there are several early varieties. One, Cold Set, can even be seeded outdoors in northern areas.

If you are unable to tolerate the acidity of tomatoes, there are low acid tomatoes like Starshot or Sunray. And for the apartment or patio gardener, there are small fruited tomatoes on small, compact and decorative plants that are also nice as a border plant. My favorite, and one I grow every year, is Tiny Tim.

As you scan the many tomato names in your catalog, you are bound to notice a number with "boy" in the name - Toy Boy, Big Boy, Wonder Boy, Better Boy, Ultra Boy. I was recently reading an interesting explanation for these names. A plant breeder at Burpee Seeds apparently was very fond of a small son of David Burpee. The breeder called the toddler Big Boy. The name struck him as a natural for his most recent development, and this first name inspired the host of Boy and Girl varieties to follow.

If you purchase tomato plants for your garden, choose young, short and stocky ones. Leggy, spindly, old-looking seedlings will not do so well. You may imagine that you will be ahead of the game to buy plants on the large side, but, in fact, the younger ones will perform better.

Growing your own tomato plants from seed is, of course, much cheaper, and allows you to plant a greater variety. You can use any sort of container you happen to have - flats, peat pots, milk cartons. But be sure to use sterilized potting soil, well dampened.

Sow seeds two inches apart and a half-inch deep. Cover the container with plastic to conserve moisture and produce a hothouselike effect. Put in a warm spot until the seeds germinate. Uncover and place in good light in slightly lower than comfortable home temperatures.

Keep seedlings, as with cuttings, on the dry side while roots are developing. When four true leaves appear, the seedlings are ready to transplant. To harden them off, place them in a protected spot outdoors during the day and set out in the garden when the weather has thoroughly warmed.

Plant sale

Southern California Botanists will conduct its annual sale of native plants and plant books on March 29 from 8 a.m. until 2 p.m. in the parking lot of Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Gardens, 1500 N. College Ave., Claremont.

A large selection of native plants in sizes to one-gallon specimens will be available for sale. Knowledgeable consultants will be on hand to discuss them.

Also, more than 100 titles of plant books will be on hand for sale, with a limited number of copies autographed by such authors as Dr. Lee Lenz ("Native Plants for California Gardens"), Elna Becker ("An Island Called California"), Charlotte Clarke ("Edible and Useful Plants of California") and Barbara Hoshizaki ("Fern Manual").

Iris show will be held at Arboretum

The Aril Society International will present its 14th annual specialty iris show April 5 and 6 at the Los Angeles State and County Arboretum, 301 N. Baldwin Ave., Arcadia. The show is open to the public on Saturday from 1 to 4:30 p.m. and Sunday from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Aril species and aril hybrids are featured, but sections for other particular irises such as dwarfs, medians, and Pacific Coast natives will be included. The arrangement competition will be divided into professional, beginning and advanced amateur, and junior sections. Exhibition privileges have been extended to everyone in both the horticultural display and the arrangement competition with accredited American Iris Society judges conferring ribbons and special awards in all sections. Entries must be registered by April 5 from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m.

Pure arils have particular traits that set them apart from the tall bearded iris more familiar to most gardeners. Botanists distinguish arils by the white collar, or aril, on the seed. Aril irises are less than one-foot tall, compared to the three-foot tall bearded species, and they have flowers with more rounded outline. A contrasting spot of a darker color usually marks the base of the downward curving petals, or falls, on each flower.

These natives of the Middle East find the climate of Southern California well-suited to their needs because they are adapted to winter rains and dry summers when they are normally dormant. However, cultivars that have been hybridized with other species usually need more irrigation during the warm months.

Admission to the Arboretum is $1 for adults and 50 cents for students with an identification card and visitors over 62 or between 5 and 17 years of age. There is no additional charge for the show or for parking.

Mary Ramirez, left, and Marylisa Ramirez prepare for the Voter's Ball sponsored by the Pomona Catholic High School PTA. The dinner-dance will be held Saturday in the Damien High School gym in La Verne. Cocktail hour with strolling musicians will be held from 6-7 p.m. The buffet dinner begins at 7 with dancing to the music of the Sal Vasques Band beginning at 9. For information and tickets call 629-0591. (Staff photo)

Now has a complaint manual

Consumer's office directs complaints, suggests help

By DIANE CLARK
Copley News Service
WASHINGTON

Opening the mail at the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs is not always a pleasant experience.

Packages have unveiled maggot-infested candy, a can of Chinese vegetables that contained a packing machine bolt but no vegetables and a grimy toilet seat from a man angry that when he bought a house the former owner had taken the toilet seat with him, leaving a grungy replacement behind.

But usually the consumer complaints come in the form of letters.

A Louisville, Ky., couple asked the office to help it secure a $1,375 refund after they were shocked when a Caribbean vacation billed as "just for them" by the travel agent turned out to be a "singles" event with drunkenness, marijuana and nudity.

A Miami Beach widow who had sold her diamond ring to pay for false teeth didn't know where to turn when her new bridge was improperly fitted causing her gums to become infected. The dentist was not fixing the problem and money was tight.

Letters, such as those from the two individuals mentioned above, sometimes come in neatly typed and describing a problem that is easily categorized and then can be sent to the proper agency for action. Others are more difficult to handle.

For all the complaints the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs gets, one would think it is in the complaint-handling business. Officially, it is not and is trying to shed the image by helping consumers to the right agency on the first try.

"We are not a regulatory agency. Every complaint we get has to go somewhere else to be handled," said Dan Rumelt of the office.

He pointed out that, while the agency is happy to put people in touch with the proper department, valuable time may be lost in the process. If the complaint is an urgent one, the answer may even come too late.

The problem is that, with the multiple layers of governmental bureaucracy, people simply don't know where to go.

This was sharply pointed out in a government-commissioned study begun in 1974 and completed last year on the effectiveness of its complaint-handling mechanisms.

Among other recommendations the study suggested that the Office of Consumer Affairs (OCA) get out of the business of responding to individual complaints and concentrate on setting up a complaint-handling system for all federal agencies to use.

The report also emphasized the need for wide public distribution of a consumer complaint-handling manual that would tell the "who, what, when, where and why" of filing a complaint.

The office has now published such a manual.

"We were going to call it, Stop Complaining and Complain," said Esther Peterson, special assistant to President Carter for Consumer Affairs and head of the office.

Instead, it is called the Consumer's Resource Handbook and the 76-page booklet is available free by writing Consumer's Resource Handbook, Consumer Information Center, Dept. 635-H, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

"Every day I receive letters and phone calls from consumers asking questions such as: 'What do I do if my car dealer refuses to perform repairs that come under my warranty?' 'What are my rights if I get bumped from an airplane flight?' 'Is there a way to track down mail-order merchandise that was paid for but never delivered?' 'How can I select a safe toy for my 4-year-old?'

"I am pleased to say that now you can turn to this Consumer's Resource Handbook for help," Peterson said.

The handbook lists the federal agencies with addresses and phone numbers. It also lists local agencies state by state which specialize in all kinds of problems from aging to energy.

It suggests alternative sources of help like "action lines," consumer credit counseling services, Legal Aid societies, public-interest law centers, state licensing boards and bureaus, small claims courts and industry problem-arbitration panels.

But the booklet goes beyond that.

It tells people "how" to complain.

For instance, the couple who disliked their Caribbean vacation had written not only the Office of Consumer Affairs, but their travel agent, the resort, their congressman and the Civil Aeronautics Board. The letter was neat, typed, spelled out the problem fully and contained facts and figures backing up the allegations. They got their refund.

By JOHN M. BOGERT
Copley News Service
LOS ANGELES — Harry, the departed cocker spaniel, is lying in state in a white plastic coffin.

A menorahlike electric lamp glows above the plaster statue of the Virgin that stands behind him on the artificial turf-topped desk.

It is a scene, however, best left unjudged by outsiders. Even Glenn Solano, Harry's master for 10 years, knows this and can see that the proceedings are somewhat bizarre.

But in his mind, at this moment, he doesn't care. This funeral at Gardena's Pet Haven Memorial Cemetery is his way of repaying the dog for all those years of companionship.

Alone, the Manhattan Beach construction worker follows Harry's coffin to an open grave and stands silently as the box is lowered into the earth and covered.

"You know, you tell someone that your dog died and they give you this look like 'so what.'"

"But they don't understand how much an animal can mean to you when you have no wife or children of your own."

"I really loved this dog, and I'm sure nobody will understand that or why I'm doing this for him. You'd have to have known old Harry to understand that."

He waits until the box is completely covered, then excuses himself.

"I have to go now and get some flowers," he says.

Actually Solano is wrong in thinking he's alone in his pain. The 25,000 people who have buried pets in the park since it opened in 1948 would understand.

Many of them have even gone steps further and placed black granite markers over the graves of their animals.

Some have had aluminum engravings of their pets placed on the stones, along with some of the most heart-wrenching poetry to be found this side of Forest Lawn.

"The grief over the loss of a pet is no less than the grief suffered from the loss of a person," says the park's owner, Elizabeth Galloway.

In fact, the Galloways founded the cemetery after they were unable to find a suitable gravesite for one of their own pets.

"Back then," she says, "there wasn't much in the way of pet cemeteries except these waterless sand patches where you couldn't even grow grass."

Having come up with a better plan, they began the cemetery in what was then the heart of the country.

Now surrounded on two sides by huge warehouses, the Figueroa Street location is still the site of from three to six burials a day with enough space for another 30 years' worth.

The famous and the obscure have come to bury their pets here at prices ranging from $68 for a small bird or animal to $214 for a Great Dane or a St. Bernard.

The price includes preparation, satin-lined casket and gravesite.

Grave markers can be purchased for $69 to $114.

Or, if you choose, you can have your pet cremated on the premises for between $20 and $85.

"Some people find this sort of bizarre," says Wesley Dowell, who prepares the animals for burial at the cemetery. "But I feel like we're performing a service that must be done."

Dowell, who got the job through a newspaper ad a short time ago, says he gets a great deal of satisfaction from the trade he learned on the job.

The 4.5-acre cemetery is covered with the kind of stuff that would just suit the mad sensibilities of most of the FiFis, Trickies, Muffys, Gildas, Rexes, GeGees and Long Earses here buried.

Remodeling? Some things around house to look for

By CLYDE V. SMITH
Copley News Service

More hints, hopefully helpful, on matters concerning and influencing the decisions of home owners or buyers on whether remodeling and expanding a house will be worthwhile.

First, this article is designed to alert you to deficiencies you may find in an old house (or young house, for that matter) that may call for repair in a remodeling project.

But just because you find faults doesn't mean a house is not worth remodeling. Maybe it just needs fixing or replacement of certain items.

Even a new house may need repainting in a few years. And possibly a new roof within a decade or so.

As a recent government guide to remodeling pointed out, if the foundation is good and the framing generally square and in good condition, a house is probably worth remodeling.

However, anyone considering remodeling should also be aware of other defects, because repair and restoration will increase remodeling costs.

Here's some other things to look for:

In examining siding, look for space between horizontal siding boards by sighting along the wall. Where warped boards leave big gaps, new siding may be essential. If boards are not badly warped, renailling may solve the problem. Check the ends of siding boards for decay where two boards butt together, at corners, around windows and door frames.

Good shingle siding appears as a perfect mosaic. Worn shingles appear ragged, and individual shingles are often broken, warped and upturned. New siding may be required if these shingles are badly weathered or worn.

Cracks in brick or stone veneer can be grouted and joints repointed, but large or numerous cracks may be unsightly even after repair. To prevent water from entering masonry walls, examine the flashing at all projecting trim, copings, sills and intersections with the roof. Plan to repair any of these places where flashing is not provided.

Check all windows for tight fit and examine the sash and sill for decay. Weatherstripping can better seal the window, but if the sash or sill is decayed, it must be replaced. If you plan replacement, however, measure the window to determine if it is a standard size. If not, the opening will have to be reframed or a custom sash made — both of which are expensive.

In cold climates double-glazed or storm windows are advisable. Again, if the windows are not a standard size, making storm windows may be expensive.

Heating and plumbing systems and electrical wiring are vital to the comfort and convenience of modern living. Utility systems have generally been improved in recent years, so the older home may require updating. But this should not be a deterrent to remodeling a structurally sound house — if you can afford it.

In this time of concern for saving fuel, the efficiency of the heating system compares in importance to insulation. Utility companies can advise you on this.

Older houses are often drafty and cold, but insulation, storm windows and doors, and weatherstripping can help make them warm and comfortable even in cold climates. If there is little or no insulation in the ceiling, the first priority would be to add it. Where insulation is added to walls, a greater expense and effort is involved, usually necessitating professional assistance. But the results may be worth it.

Good plumbing, of course, is vital. Many old homes still have galvanized iron piping that can become clogged, eroded and lead to trouble. Most of the homes built in the last two decades have copper plumbing or, in some cases, plastic plumbing.

In any event, check several faucets to see if the flow is adequate and there is good pressure.

Look for leaks in the water system. Rust or white or greenish crust on pipe or joints may indicate a leak. Check for clogged drains by flushing the toilet and observing any sluggishness. Also run water for a few minutes to determine if the drains are clogged.

Little improvement predicted

Productivity plunge continues

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

America's productivity slippage — beginning to become something of a scandal — continued alarmingly last year, and economists see little or no improvement this year.

The Labor Department revealed that private business productivity (output per work hour) plunged 1.6 percent in the fourth quarter and 0.9 percent for the full year. It was the first full-year decline since a 3 percent drop in 1974.

The Labor Department also reported that some major collective-bargaining settlements last year yielded average first-year wage increases of 8.8 percent, up from 8.2 percent in 1978. The figure included cost-of-living adjustments.

With wages rising by about 9 percent and productivity declining by 1 percent, that's a built-in 10 percent inflation rate, according to those analysts who believe that a good rule of thumb for calculating inflation is subtracting productivity gains from wage increases.

The rule of thumb didn't do so well last year — consumer inflation was more than 13 percent.

However, other rules of thumb — such as basing future inflation forecasts on current money-supply growth rates — also came up short.

Last year's productivity decline is particularly worrisome because it came during a time when the economy was expanding — albeit very sluggishly. If the economy contracts this year in real, inflation-adjusted terms — and many economists think it will — then productivity would be certain to decline once again.

Normally, productivity rises sharply just as the economy comes out of a recession. Thus, if the 1980 recession bottoms out in midyear, there could be a recovery in the second half.

Increasingly, however, economists aren't counting on much of a bounce. They now suspect that the recession — if it comes at all — will be mild and accompanied by very high inflation. If this stagflation scenario eventuates, the recovery would be anemic, and so would productivity growth.

"It's disappointing, but not surprising, that we had such a productivity collapse in 1979," said George Cruikshank of New York's Morgan Guaranty Bank. He figures that the components of last year's 13 percent consumer inflation broke down as follows: wages up 9 percent, productivity down 1 percent, energy inflation added 2 percent, and interest rates another 1 percent.

"In 1980 we see wages going up 9.5 percent, and productivity inching up maybe 0.5 percent, so that there would be a 9 percent increase in unit costs. We think OPEC prices will add another 2 percentage points again this year, but interest rates won't be a factor. Therefore, we get inflation of 11 percent."

"We're not so sure now that there will be a recession. It now appears that the first quarter will be an 'up' quarter (there will be positive growth of the economy, but possibly very little), although the downturn may come in the second quarter," Cruikshank said.

Professor Herman Liebling of Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., is pessimistic about both the short run and the long run. He was formerly chief economic forecaster for the U.S.

San Dimas Press; LaVerne Leader; The Bulletin; Upland News; Rancho Cucamonga Times; Montclair Tribune

Treasury.

"We've had an underlying downturn in the growth of productivity developing since 1972. We have to add this cyclical decline to that — it exacerbates the long-term decline," Liebling said. "But I would now expect continued bad news when the economy recovers. This in turn will hurt corporate profits." In recent years, U.S. productivity growth has lagged badly behind that of other nations — in fact, our performance has been almost at the bottom among major nations.

"For 1980 I would think we would have no gain in productivity," Liebling said — and beyond 1980 he fears that we are locked into the high-inflation-low-capital-formation trap that will put the problem at center stage for several years.

Hughes wins suit with SoCal Edison

A valley developer has won a favorable decision in a legal dispute with Southern California Edison Co. over which entity is responsible for costs of relocating utility poles when street and highway rights-of-way are expanded.

Everette Hughes of Hughes Development Corp. in Glendora said he filed the case in Pomona Superior Court after the utility refused to pay for relocation of poles to accommodate housing developments in Claremont and La Verne.

Hughes said about 40 poles were involved, with costs ranging from $3,800 to $5,000 each.

William Dennis, attorney for Hughes, said the state Supreme Court has refused to hear an appeal of rulings handed down by Superior Court Judge Paul Egly and a panel of appellate court judges who ordered Edison Co. to finance relocation of the utility poles.

Dennis said the utility company refused to pay for relocating the poles.

despite a decision by the city of Claremont that it was the Edison Co.'s responsibility.

The attorney said the judicial rulings support the authority of cities to decide financial responsibility for relocation of utilities. He added that cities generally base the decision on whether the relocation is beneficial to the entire community or a single subdivision.

Amended returns slow taxpayers' state refunds

By MARTIN GERCHEN
Copley News Service

Plans by the state Franchise Tax Board to refund $500 million this year to Californians pose a "very serious" problem because many workers are not claiming the money properly on their income tax returns.

Taxpayers who had taxes for state disability insurance withheld last year are entitled to claim a one-time refund of 80 percent of what they paid, but surveys of returns filed early show that 23 percent of those entitled to refunds have failed to claim them, the board's operations chief, James Gentz, said in Sacramento.

The problem arises when taxpayers realize their mistake and immediately file an amended return (540X) asking for their refund before their original 540 has cleared the board's computers, Gentz said.

When one taxpayer enters two returns at the same time, the computer rejects them, and they have to be handled manually, said board spokesman George Nelson, who said the problem is "very serious."

With about 8 million returns from qualified wage earners expected this year, and if the 23 percent error factor holds constant, some 1.7 million amended returns will hit the system.

The manual reconciliation of two returns with the same Social Security number takes time and a lot of money for which the board has not budgeted, Nelson said.

So if the error rate continues, refunds due from 540s are going to be slowed and the budget of the board will go into the red because there is no provision in it for manual reconciliation of returns, Nelson said.

The board's system is geared to the taxpayer's Social Security number. When that number shows up twice in the system, both returns are frozen and pulled from the computerized assembly line.

They are put aside to be worked on manually after error-free returns are processed.

What happens, Nelson explained, is that once 540s get into the system they go on an assembly line of processing, but they can't be identified in the middle of the line.

When the same Social Security number shows up on two returns, both are put into limbo until someone can go to the frozen area, match them up and figure out the problem.

To avoid causing this logjam, a person who didn't originally claim the SDI refund should wait until his 540 is processed and he gets a refund, Nelson said. This means that the 540 is out of the assembly line and has been filed.

Now, when the 540X comes in asking for the SDI refund, the 540 can be found easily by its Social Security number, the two reconciled and the SDI refund mailed, Nelson said.

In addition to the problem of people not claiming their SDI refunds, other taxpayers are confusing the refund with the return of excess SDI withholding, said Gentz.

If a taxpayer works for more than one employer in a single year, each employer deducts SDI equally, just as the federal government deducts Social Security all over again when a taxpayer starts a new job, regardless of how much was deducted previously by the other employer in the same tax year.

So all the Californians who paid SDI last year are entitled to a refund, while those who worked more than one job are entitled to a return of excess withholding.

In some cases, it is possible that a taxpayer who worked two jobs should claim both a refund and a return, but not until the original 540 has cleared and a refund check issued.

The maximum SDI withheld last year was $114 on wages of $11,400. Eighty percent of this is $91, the maximum refund due this year. Californians who earned less than $11,400 will get a correspondingly lower refund, but it still will be 80 percent of what they paid.

The refund is the result of a surplus in the SDI fund. Last September, Gov. Brown signed a bill giving the one-time tax rebate to drain off the $500 million surplus.

SDI pays benefits to workers disabled by illnesses unrelated to employment. Work-related disabilities are paid by workers' compensation.

SDI is financed by a 1 percent tax on the first $11,400 of a worker's pay. Revenues have been running at about $800 million a year, while benefits have been running $500 million.

At the time the refund was announced, state officials said in Sacramento that even with the refund there will be a surplus of some $300 million at the end of this year and $444 million in 1981.

Bills have been submitted to the Assembly to reduce the surplus by $110 million, in addition to the refund.

Officials of the Employment Development Department, which administers SDI, said they favor a permanent reduction in the tax to avoid the problem of surpluses in the future.

Pain Controversial treatment aids head, neck aches

By LEW SCARR
Copley News Service

Before, Luella Bannister had to be carried into doctors' offices on a stretcher. This time she was able to crawl in on her hands and knees.

"I was in terrible pain," she said, "but finally I was able to stand up in front of the doctor, and he touched certain spots and I hurt everywhere he touched."

"So he put some wax in the back of my mouth, and he stood me up again, and I had only the one pain in the back of my leg, and it was such a relief I just stood there crying like a baby."

Bannister had been and probably still is suffering from rheumatoid arthritis.

"I had had maybe 140 cortisone shots over the years along with experimental drug programs. I had had my shoulder excised and 'raped.'"

And nothing helped until that day when the doctor, a dentist, put a wax impression in the back of her mouth.

"I am telling you that that was two years ago and I have had no pain, anywhere, since. I am not on any medication, and if I could get my message through to everyone, believe me, I would stand on the highest steeple yelling."

Miraculous cure? No, not even a cure, some professionals say of this controversially simple way of treating what can be a dreadfully painful syndrome called dysfunction of the temporomandibular joint (TMJ).

That is the powerful joint that hinges the lower jaw to the skull. When it gets out of alignment from ill-fitting dentures, pipe clenching, one-sided chewing, pen or pencil biting, or any dental malocclusion (which may date from birth) intractable pain can be the result.

It is commonly undiagnosed or misdiagnosed, mimicking many different diseases with its wide variety of symptoms. It presents one of the most baggling diagnostic problems encountered by the dental and medical professions, and is so widespread it is believed that as much as 70 percent of the population have it to some degree, although only perhaps 30 percent have symptoms.

The symptoms can be interpreted as a shattering migraine headache or a nagging back or neck pain or a piercing pain in the ear.

Some doctors, such as Robert Siegel and Gerald Handler, San Diego dentists, go so far as to associate TMJ pain with dizziness, chronic fatigue, irritability, ringing ears, deafness, difficulty in swallowing and temporary memory loss.

"To compensate for (TMJ misalignment)," Siegel said, "the jaw muscles begin to hold a tense, unnatural position, and before long, the tension travels by chain reaction throughout the body."

There are various ways to treat TMJ problems.

According to Dr. Howard Davis, a Bellflower oral surgeon and one of California's busiest practitioners treating the disorder, "Many of these problems are treated just with rest. If patients chew a lot of gum, I just tell them to stop chewing gum. Probably better than 50 percent of these problems are cured with a little rest," David said.

At the other end of the therapy scale is surgery, rarely needed. In between is the treatment used by Siegel and Handler and others.

The jaw is realigned with a plastic bite plate, formed from a wax impression like the one that wiped away Bannister's pain.

Siegel said that 25 percent of his patients get 100 percent relief within five seconds when the wax is put into their mouths.

"If we can't get some relief with the wax, we won't go ahead with the rest of the treatment," he said.

For the next three or four months, the new jaw position is maintained with the plastic bite plate while the joint heals and is recontoured. The remainder of the treatment includes special exercise and stimulation.

Peggy Delgatto suffered continuous pain in her shoulder that finally took her to a hospital emergency room and then to Handler and TMJ therapy where she found relief.

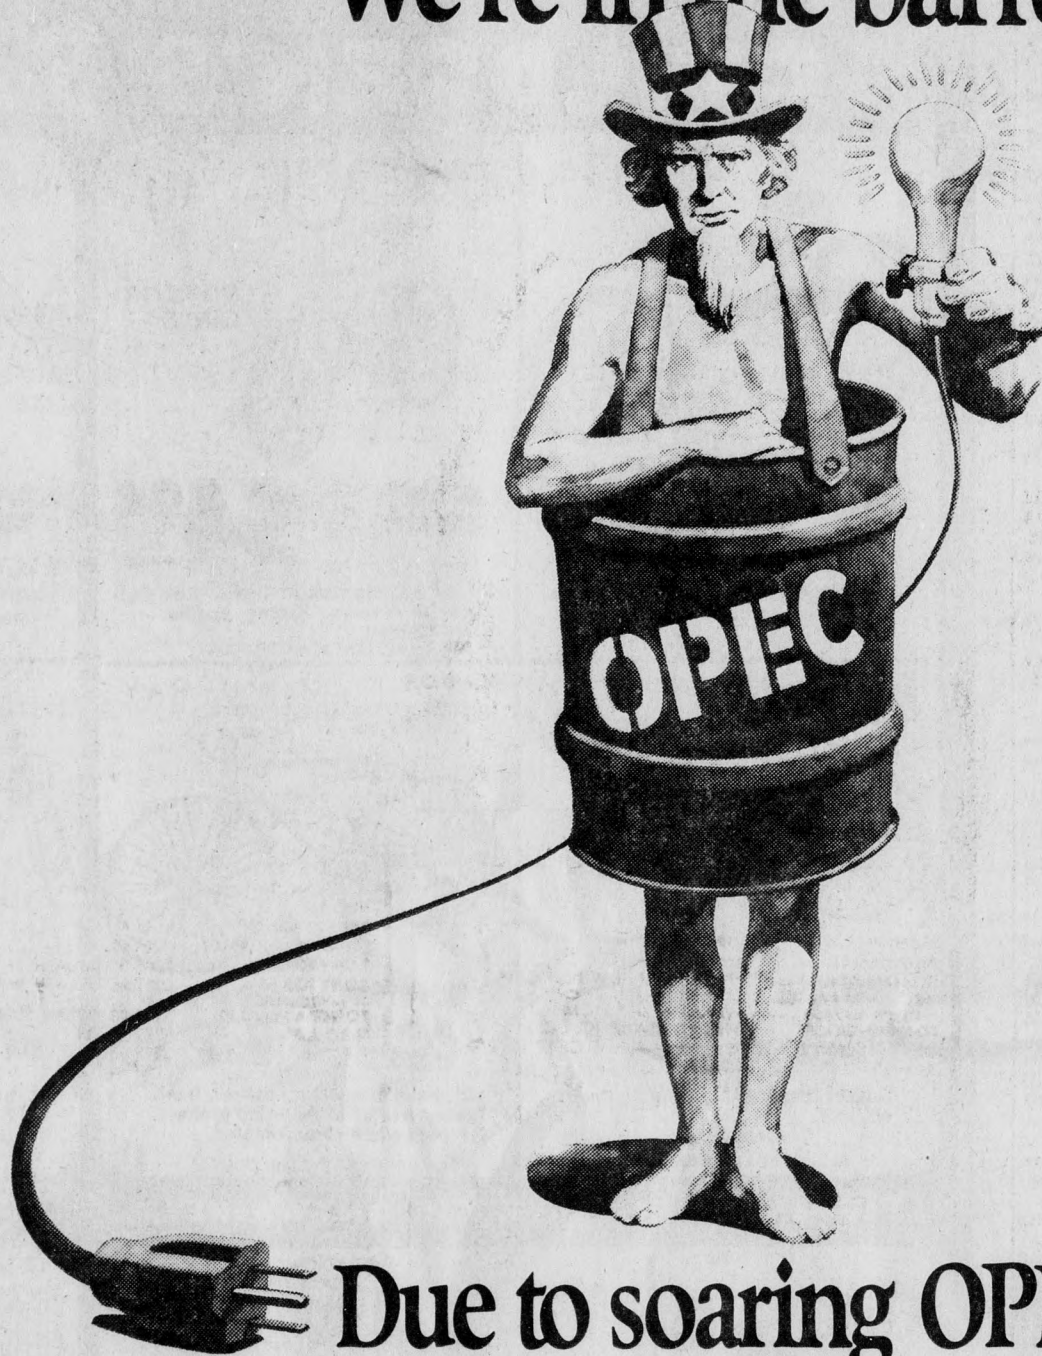

Both Delgatto's and Bannister's problems appear to have been caused by deteriorating dentures. Handler, himself, is in the final stages of TMJ therapy in his own mouth.

"I have been a dentist for almost 30 years," he said, "and after standing over a chair all of this time I thought that having a stiff neck and bad posture was all just part of it. But it got to the point where my neck muscles went into such spasms they were like a charley horse."

Dr. Carleton Williams, former president of both the local dental society and the American Dental Association, attests to "amazing results" with TMJ therapy, which he said he has been involved in since 1949.

Dr. Michael I. Keller, the rheumatologist who treated Bannister for arthritis, said, "I have mixed feelings. In Luella's case, she had a lot of subjective complaints which, nonetheless, were very real to her."

We're in the barrel.

Due to soaring OPEC oil prices, your electric rates could go up 50% this year.

Soaring OPEC oil price increases hit us all at more places than the gasoline pump. They increase your electric bill, too. To meet air quality standards, Edison is required to burn low-sulfur foreign oil. This low-sulfur oil commands a premium price. Edison expects to buy more than 44 million barrels of this oil to keep its generating plants running in 1980, at a cost of about $1.5 billion.

Back in 1970 oil cost about $2 a barrel and our oil bill was $29 million. Already this year Edison has paid more than $32 a barrel for premium grade, ultra low-sulfur oil. And we're told there will be more increases in the months ahead.

When OPEC prices go up, Edison prices go up. Your electric bill could go up 50% by the end of this year. These electric rate increases coming in 1980 will offset higher fuel costs only. They will not increase SCE profit.

Help get America out of the barrel.

Most of our plants burn oil and natural gas. Last year more than two-thirds of your electricity was generated by oil and natural gas. When we can't get enough natural gas, we're forced to depend on foreign-controlled high-cost oil.

We already make some electricity from nuclear, coal and hydroelectric sources. In addition, we're pioneering solar, geothermal and wind power. Our industrial customers are working with us in energy cogeneration. And we're actively urging conservation.

You can help by conserving, too. Every kilowatt-hour you conserve reduces U.S. dependence on foreign oil.

What you can do: join the Conservation Generation.

It's going to require sacrifice to hold your electric bills in check. It's going to take a change in habits. Here is how you can help yourself and your country:

1. Limit your use of heating and air conditioning.
2. Turn off second refrigerators and freezers if not in use.
3. Use less water where possible because it takes electricity to pump it.
4. Turn off lights in rooms not in use. And use lower wattage bulbs where possible.
5. If you have a swimming pool, cut down the time you run its filter pump.

Also do your heavy household chores in the morning. Your vacuuming, clothes washing, dishwashing and oven baking. And give your appliances the afternoon off. That way you'll be easing the load between noon and 6 p.m. when demand is at the peak.

Write Edison for conservation help.

On request, Edison will provide you with a personally tailored, computer-designed, energy conservation program—called S.A.V.E.S.—that's easy to put into action. You can also write for a free booklet that gives you lots of helpful suggestions on use of air conditioning, heating, lighting, water heating, home appliances and solar energy systems. Write today: Southern California Edison, Conservation, P.O. Box 800, Rosemead, CA 91770.

There's a big job to be done in the years ahead. If you take it easy on the electricity you use—while we work hard to develop domestic ways to produce it—there are bright lights at the end of the tunnel.

Las Vegas Night planned

The La Verne-San Dimas Junior Women's Club will conduct a Las Vegas Night Saturday from 7 to midnight at the San Dimas Community Building, 245 E. Bonita Ave., San Dimas.

The event is open to the public and anyone 21 years and older may participate.

Admission is a $5 donation. Proceeds will be used by the club to support its on-going projects which include the child molestation prevention program, "Rapist Beware" classes, muscular dystrophy projects and step-parenting program.

Further information on tickets may be obtained by contacting Marie Mazurek at 599-8583 or Susan Brosche at 599-7969.

Plays to be presented

3X Beckett: "Footfalls," "That Time," "Not I," three short plays by Samuel Beckett, presented by the Inter-City Company will be staged in the Chaffey College Theatre on Friday, April 4 at 8 p.m.

In "Footfalls," a woman paces nine steps forward and nine steps back, "revolving it all... in her poor mind." A man in "That Time" remembers three episodes from his past until he comes to that time when he "tried and couldn't anymore, no words left to keep it out, and gave up for good and let it in."

A woman in "Not I" speaks in anguish of not being able to stop the stream of words pouring from her, and desperately refuses to admit that her monologue is autobiographical. In these three short plays the author of "Waiting for Godot" continues his investigation of the human need for fictionmaking, and gives us a powerful and poignant theatre experience.

Steve Young, the director of the Inter-City Company and performer in "That Time," teaches dramatic literature (including Beckett) at Pomona College. The idea for this program grew out of a production of Beckett's "Endgame" in which Joan Calderera, the performer in "Not I," directed Young in the role of Hamm.

Calderera has had extensive acting and directing experience in Albuquerque and Toronto playing such varied roles as Medea and Viola in "Twelfth Night." Jennifer Bunker, the performer in "Footfalls" has been a professional actress in New York, both on the stage and in television.

In addition to the Chaffey performance the company will perform at the McConnell Center, Pitzer College, in Claremont and at the Otis Art Institute of Parsons School of Design in Los Angeles.

The program is sponsored by the Chaffey Theatre Arts Department and the Community Services Office. Admission is $2.50 general and $1.50 for students.

Information and reservations may be made by calling the Chaffey Box Office 987-1745.

Dog obedience

Dog obedience, sponsored by the City of Claremont, Human Services Department, will begin Monday. The first class will meet at the Senior Citizen Center for a lecture which does not include the dogs. The rest of the 9 week session will be held in Memorial Park on Monday evenings from 6-8 p.m. The fee is $24.50.

The instructor, Charles Kuntz, will be teaching all basic obedience commands, on and off the leash. Verbal and sight commands are utilized throughout the course. Tolerance of other dogs and people along with introduction to intermediate commands rounds out the curriculum. Special help will be given to problem dogs.

Registration is now being taken for this class, Monday through Friday between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the Memorial Park office. For further information, please call 624-4531, extension 280 during office hours.

Blue cross unit to visit

Blue Cross of Southern California's mobil unit will be visiting Pomona on Tuesday and Wednesday providing residents greater access to health care information and insurance benefits.

The mobil unit's self-contained office, within a 34-foot trailer, will be stationed from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at Hughes Market, 690 E. Holt Ave.

Representatives from Blue Cross Plan headquarters will be equipped to offer "on the spot" information about each subscriber's policy, coverage and claims.

Health care literature on sexually-transmitted diseases, blood pressure, stroke, first aid, diabetes, sickle-cell anemia and many other topics will be available in both English and Spanish.

Claremont spring recess trips

The Claremont Human Services department will be sponsoring four fun-filled trips during the spring recess. On Monday a bus will leave Memorial Park at 9 a.m. and will magically transport you to Magic Mountain. The bus will return at 7 p.m. at only a cost of $13. The bus will carry a maximum of 42.

On Tuesday a bus will venture at 12:45 to the Holiday Roller Rink for an afternoon filled with fun. Return time will be 4 p.m. The fee is only $2.50, including skates.

On Wednesday visit Mickey and Donald at Disneyland. Leaving Memorial Park at 9 a.m. and returning at 6 p.m. a bus load of a maximum of 42 will enjoy the day at Disneyland. The cost is $10.50.

On Thursday, April 3, a bus will leave Memorial Park for Knott's Berry Farm at 9 a.m. and return 5 p.m. for a fee of $8.50.

All persons must be pre-registered, and children must be 10 years old unless accompanied by an adult. There will be supervision on the bus — but not at the site. Registration will be taken Monday through Friday, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the human services offices in Memorial Park, 846 N. Indian Hill Blvd. For further information, please call 624-4531, extension 280, during office hours.

After school playgrounds

Claremont Human Services Department has opened an after school playground program at five elementary schools in Claremont. There are experienced leaders ready with crafts, games, sports and contests at each of the following playgrounds: Sycamore, Oakmont, Mt. View, Chaparral and Sumner.

Elementary aged children are encouraged to join the fun from 3 to 5 p.m. daily (except for rainy days). The program is free of charge to the participants and pre-registration is not necessary.

For further information, please call 624-4531, extension 280 Monday through Friday, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Film to be shown

The Montclair Library in cooperation with the Human Services Department is planning a showing of "The Silent Witness," a film about the mystery and speculation that has surrounded the Shroud of Turin.

It will be shown in the Montclair Recreation Department, Room B, on Monday at 1:30 p.m.

This dramatic documentary becomes a fascinating detective story as art historians, Interpol experts, forensic scientists, JPL/NASA image researchers and Oxford theologians trace the shroud's history and reveal the startling results of modern scientific testing.

Dancer to perform

With her eyes, her body movements, her gestures and a couple of hundred bells, Anjani Ambegaokar will dance the story of the world's creation in a Claremont performance Friday.

The Indian dancer will interpret Kathak, a 2,000-year-old classical dance from northern India that was influenced by both Hindu and Muslim cultures. She wears more than a hundred bells on each ankle and is accompanied by singing and music of the tabla, the sitar, the harmonium and the Indian drum.

The Blaisdell Institute, an affiliate of The Claremont Colleges, is sponsoring the performance. It will be at 8 p.m. in Balch Hall on the Scripps College campus, 9th Street and Columbia Avenue. Tickets will be sold at the door at $3 for general admission, $1.50 for students.

Judy Collins to appear

Folk singer, Judy Collins, and comedy star of "Fernwood 2 Night," Martin Mull, have been added to the schedule of spring events at Bridges Auditorium. (Cont'd. on next page)

Widows group to meet

A program on "What It Is to Be a Widow" will be featured March 27 at 7:30 p.m. when the Widows Helping Widows group meets in the Mutual Savings and Loan, Von's Shopping Center at Euclid Avenue and Foothill Boulevard, Upland.

Speaker will be Leslie Heyboer, a doctoral candidate at the University of La Verne's Graduate School. A widow, she is working on grief counseling as her project and has worked with widow groups. She also heads a discussion group which meets weekly in participants' homes.

Persons interested in any program offered by Widows Helping Widows, may call the Euclid Pastoral Counseling Service at 985-0513 for further information.

Claremont. Collins will appear in one performance only on Saturday, April 26 at 8:01 p.m.; and Mull will make his exclusive Southern California appearance, on Sunday, April 27 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are now available at Bridges Box Office, Mutual Agencies or by phone at (714) 621-8032. A limited number of student tickets are available.

Judy Collins, although best known as a singer, is also a song writer, an actress, and a film director. Collins, embarking on her first American tour in several years, will sing some of the tunes from "Hard Times For Lovers," her seventeenth album for Elektra Records. In the album, Collins feels she is exploring two specific areas of American music: the country and western song, and the tradition of theatre and show music. Collins maintains that the tunes represent some of the best in the American pop tradition, and that "the pop of today is the folk or classical music of tomorrow."

Martin Mull first became a citizen of Fernwood, Ohio, with his portrayal of the wife-beating Garth Gimble on TV's "Mary Hartman." Then, upon Garth's demise, Mull created the role of twin brother Barth, the "silky-smooth and tactless" host of 1977's summer show, "Fernwood 2 Night," a talk show spoof featuring "mythical" celebrity guests as well as real ones, including Charleton Heston, Burt Lancaster, Carol Burnett, Melissa Manchester and Peter Frampton.

Lady Pilots meeting to be held

Merriam will also present a 40-minute slide presentation.

Cal Poly sets open campus

"Kellogg's Kreation," Cal Poly Pomona's annual Poly Vue open house celebration will be held for the public by the university's students, faculty, staff and administration Friday-Sunday, April 18-20.

This is the 38th spring that Cal Poly has opened the entire campus for academic displays and information, tours, special events and exhibits, entertainment and participation activities for all members of its communities.

The 1200-acre Cal Poly Pomona campus is located on land that comprised the Kellogg Ranch built in 1925 as a residence Arabian horse show place of cereal magnate W.K. Kellogg. The land, its period buildings and the Arabians were deeded to the university in 1949. Cal Poly Pomona was founded in 1938 when the campus of the Voorhis School for Boys in San Dimas was given to the university by the Voorhis family.

Among this year's more than 100 public events, programs and exhibits will be a display, film and presentation about Albert Einstein (as part of the Einstein centennial); computer games, jazz and concert band performances; information about Cal Poly's ocean and desert studies consortia, ocean engineering, urban planning and land use; demonstrations of past and present farming methods, of how to use the potters wheel, of the operation of a supersonic wind tunnel, of how to give pets emergency first aid and general animal health care. Activities and exhibits will also include a carnival. Please telephone the Cal Poly news and publications office for additional Poly Vue information (714) 598-4733.

PURPOSE TO CODE: "ML" ZONE 9473.010 DESCRIPTION AND PURPOSE.

The "ML" Light Industrial Zone is intended to provide for the development of industrial uses which include fabrication, manufacturing, assembly or processing of materials that are in already processed form and which do not, in their maintenance, assembly, manufacture or plan operation create smoke, gas, odor, dust, sound, vibration, soot or lighting to any degree which might be termed obnoxious or offensive to persons residing in or conducting business in either this or any other zone of the City. (9110.83)

This zone is also intended to provide locations for "Industrial Planned Unit Developments" (MPUD's), as defined hereinafter, wherein pre-sale fabrication, warehousing, wholesale operations, and a limited range of retail commercial uses may occur within the same structure, lot or combination thereof. Provided, however, that any retail uses located in such parks do not generate either pedestrian or vehicular traffic of a quantity or nature detrimental to the conduct of industrial operations.

INDUSTRIAL "PLANNED UNIT DEVELOPMENT" (MPUD).
 A large scale development of a parcel or of a combination of related parcels to be developed by a single owner or group of owners acting jointly, involving a related group of uses, planned as a unit and having a predominant developmental feature which serves to unify or organize development and is, therefore, susceptible to development and regulation as one unified land unit rather than as a mere aggregation of individual buildings and structures located on separate lots.

9473.020 PERMITTED PRIMARY USES AND STRUCTURES.
 The following uses, grouped by code in accordance with the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) classification of Land Use (1968 Edition), and buildings and structures, therefore, may be permitted in the "ML" Zone subject to all provisions of this Chapter. 010 RETAIL SALES AS AN INCIDENTAL USE TO PRIMARY PERMITTED MANUFACTURING OR WHOLESALE USES. Direct Sales to the ultimate consumer of items which are either fabricated, processed, or assembled on the premises, or which are part of a wholesale operation may be permitted subject to review and approval of the Administrative Committee and compliance with all of the following:

01. Any such direct sales shall be maintained only as an incidental use to the primary permitted use.

02. All items for direct sale shall be of a limited and specialized product line (e.g., offering a narrow range and selection of products for direct sale).

products, and shall not be so expanded as to constitute the primary use of such premises.

060 That the nature of such retail use does not require, necessitate or warrant commercial signing or other advertising intended to attract volumes of either pedestrian or vehicular traffic uncharacteristic of industrial facilities.

Provided, however, that the Administrative Committee, in approving any such use in compliance with the findings set forth hereinabove, may impose such conditions for approval of such use as deemed reasonable and necessary to protect the public health, safety and welfare and provide for the proper protection of the City's industrial base.
